Campbell Hits Town

Doug Campbell, Paducah's winningest pitcher last year, hit town Saturday night—but hopes for him returning to the Chiefs are still too dim to even glimmer.

The big Milton, Mass., right-hander is the property of the Boston Braves so he won't even work out here. Campbell made it plain last winter that he didn't want to stay in the Boston organization. And he definitely wants to say here.

He hasn't reported to the Braves' Myrtle Beach, S. C. camp—and he should be there. Several days ago Harry Jenkins called President Polk Brooks and offered to peddle Campbell to the Chiefs for a nice figure of $500.

But the price ought to come down if Campbell doesn't report. For Doug probably isn't too important a figure in the Braves plans that he might not draw an early release. Or if Campbell isn't in Myrtle Beach soon, his price tag may come down a lot more.

Right now he's in town however, Brooks isn't talking to him for its against all rules of professional baseball to talk terms to a player under contract with another organization.

Will Campbell be a Chief this year? Your guess is as good as ours.

Thinking Of The Boys

You can't say that Skipper Walt DeFreitas doesn't have the good of his prospects at heart. For the fiery little infielder who will guide Paducah's Chiefs this summer has already shown in a few short days that he won't go all out to win if it interferes with the future of his kids.
